

NO TRACE OF POSTOFFICE ROBBERS

Early Morning Robbers Haul Mokena Postoffice Safe Away In Truck

Early morning robbers broke into the Mokena postoffice Tuesday morning and hauled away an 800 pound safe on a truck without anyone becoming aware of their presence. Neighbors heard a truck about four o'clock in the morning but paid no particular attention to it.

The robbery was discovered about 5:30 a. m., by J. Grothendick, seventy year old Spanish-American war veteran mail messenger. Mr. Grothendick found the postoffice door open and the safe missing.

The robbers had gained entrance by cutting a hole in the glass in the door so the robbers could reach in and open the catch lock. Marks on the floor showed where the safe had been rolled from the rear of the postoffice thru the lobby and loaded on a truck which had been backed up to the post office door as indicated by the tire tread marks in front of the postoffice.

Mr. Grothendick immediately notified Miss Margaret Maue, the postmistress, of the robbery and she in turn notified the federal postal officials in Chicago and in a short time two government inspectors were on the job, taking finger prints and photos of any markings that might furnish a clue. The exterior of the postoffice was also photographed.

No one was allowed to enter the postoffice as the federal men were checking up. Police chief George Bennett was stationed in the doorway of the postoffice and handed the mail out as the patrons called.

Upon checking up it was found that the robbers had taken the following loot:

About $400 in stamps; $82 in cashed money orders; $1300 in government savings bonds; $198 in cash; $60 in checks and two books of blank money orders. All the record books of the postoffice were in the safe and were also taken.

It is said that there is hardly any likelihood that the robbers will attempt to pass the savings bonds, but that they will dispose of the stamps and possibly endorsed checks. Whether they will attempt to use the blank orders is also problematical as the name of the postoffice is printed on the money orders.

The loss is not insured. The safe was estimated to be worth about $50 by Miss Maue. It is thought that a gang of four or five men pulled the job. This is the first time in the history of the Mokena postoffice that it has been robbed.

Sometime ago the postoffice at Braidwood was robbed but the government men caught up with the robbers sometime later in New York City. So it is likely that the robbers of the Mokena postoffice will be caught by the federal officials.

A parcel post package addressed to Ben Tewes was torn open, but the contents were not molested.

5 MOKENA MEN FIGURE IN TWO AUTO ACCIDENTS

Five Mokena men figured in two serious accidents last Saturday night.

While driving home from a dance in Frankfort in a coupe, Richard Muehler and Harold Homering crashed into the rear of a car that was pushing another car on the Lincoln highway. Both were injured, Harold suffering bad cuts about the head when he hit the windshield.

Shortly after the crash another Mokena car came along in which Mr. and Mrs. Walter Olson and Mrs. Morry Larson were riding. They stopped and Mr. Olson decided to remain with Richard while Mrs. Olson and Mrs. Larson rushed Harold to the office of Dr. E. G. McMahon in Mokena.

Soon afterward a car in which George and John Bennett of Mokena were riding came by and stopped and picked up Richard Muehler and Walter Olson. Upon reaching Mokena on the Wolf Road they failed to see a freight train standing on the crossing until they were within 15 feet of it and crashed into the side of a box car. The train had failed to pull far enough down the track to clear the crossing and the crossing warning bell failed to ring and there were no lights out to protect the crossing.

All four occupants were hurt, the worst injury being suffered by John Bennett who received a deep gash on the right leg which took twelve stitches to close. The cars figuring in the two accidents were badly damaged. The last mentioned accident occurred at 2:24 Sunday morning.

HERE ARE THE 3 CRACK MOKENA HUNTERS AND FOXES THEY SHOT IN THE BIG FOX HUNT SUNDAY

A hunter's army of about 70 men set forth from Mokena Sunday morning on a fox hunting expedition. The hunt centered in the woodland north of the Brick Tavern on the Lincoln Highway, New Lenox township and in the Owen timberland. Six red foxes were sighted, but three managed to escape as the hunters circle was not large enough to surround them.

Three of the foxes, however, fell before the skilled marksmanship of Fred Cappel, president of the Mokena Chapter of the Will County Sportsmen's League, Herman Schweser and Alfred Heiman, all of Mokena.

The outstanding feature of the fox hunt was the bringing down of one of the foxes with a 410 pistol grip gun by Herman Schweser. This is a shotgun of small caliber that is held somewhat the same as a sub-machine gun is held, that is, there is no shoulder rest, the gun being sighted much the same as a pistol.

The three successful hunters were permitted to keep their trophies and are having the pelts tanned.

After the hunt the hunters all returned to Mokena and had their pictures taken. Another fox hunt will be held this Sunday noon. Anyone interested to join the hunt, should meet with the group at August Brown's pool hall in Mokena at 12 o'clock noon.

About 300 men are wanted in this hunt.

FORMER MOKENA RESIDENT DIES IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Caroline Unbehaun, aged 84 years, a former resident of Frankfort township and the Mokena territory, died at 11 a. m. Tuesday in the Copley hospital in Aurora following a major operation. Some years ago she underwent an operation for a bowel obstruction in Silver Cross, in Joliet, which proved very successful. About a week ago she became ill and the attending physicians found that an operation was the only chance that might save her life, but she died after being in the hospital about 22 hours.

Caroline Unbehaun, nee Werner, was born on the old John Werner farm east of Mokena, now the John Klose farm, May 16, 1852. She well remembered the civil war period and often spoke about it.

She was married to John Unbehaun of Mokena, July 9, 1871. To this union four children were born, of whom one died in infancy.

Mr. and Mrs. Unbehaun engaged in farming in the Mokena territory and when they retired from farming they located in Joliet. Mr. Unbehaun died about 1916.

Following her husband's death the deceased made her home with her son John in Deshler, Neb., for fifteen years until he removed to Aurora where she has since resided.

She was a devoutly Christian woman and was fully prepared to meet her Lord and Master.

Surviving are one son, John and two daughters, Ernestine and Louise; 14 great children; eight great grand children; one sister, Mrs. Valentin Kehres, Deshler, Neb.

Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 1:30 p. m. in the Immanuel Lutheran church in Mokena with Rev. Walter Geffert officiating. Burial will be made in the Lutheran cemetery near Frankfort.

At 3:30 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Theo. Haefele, pastor of St. John Evangelical church of Mokena, offered a prayer and also read greetings and prayers from the following former pastors of St. John church: Rev. G. Sieveking, Rev. Cramer, Rev. Bratzel and Rev. Mortiz, and later in the day Mrs. Wm. Kreis, presented Mrs. Marti with a beautiful poem in memory of the late Rev. Wm. Kreis.

A large basket with eighty carnations was presented to the honored guests by her five grand children.

Many other beautiful plants flowers were received. The Women's Union of St. John church presented a beautiful box of lovely blooming plants. A carnation was sent to Mrs. Marti by the bereaved Krapp family which Mrs. Marti values very much and which she will always keep as a memorial of her life long friend, Mrs. Selma E. Krapp.

Mrs. Wm. Bradley, decorated a birthday cake with eighty pink and white candles and which adorned the buffet.

Mr. I. D. Marti and Mrs. Wm. Lowe and daughter want to thank the many friends for their visit Sunday which Mrs. Marti enjoyed very much.

HUNDREDS AT FINAL RITES FOR MRS. E. P. KRAPP

Death rang down the curtain on a beautiful life when Mrs. Emil P. Krapp passed away in her home in Mokena last Friday morning at 6:10 o'clock.

Mrs. Krapp, nee Selma Schaub, first saw the light of this world in Peotone township on January 24, 1873. At the age of three months she came to Mokena with parents, Rev. and Mrs. C. Schaub and lived here all her life.

Mrs. E. P. Krapp

Her father, the late Rev. Mr. Schaub entered into the Master's work in Mokena as pastor of the St. John Evangelical church which he faithfully served for 35 years.

In this devoutly Christian home and in truly Christian environment, the deceased was reared in the Christian life and faith which so enriched her life that she grew into a lovable character and her life truly exemplified the faith she professed. She lived a life which leaves this community better for her having lived in it. Everyone who knew her, esteemed her, and on every hand, the comment was heard, that her life was a noble one.

Imbued with high Christian ideals she lived them in her daily life. Her service and distinction has been, the energetic and faithful support she lent to the cause of the church and to the betterment of her community.

On September 27, 1892, she was united in marriage with Emil P. Krapp of Mokena. To this union, three sons were born, all of whom are living.

For sixteen years she served as president of the Women's Union of the St. John Evangelical church. For many years she served as the organist of this church and also as teacher in the Sunday school.

She was also secretary of the Women's Federation of the Monee District for some time.

Surviving are her husband, Emil P. Krapp; three sons, Karl and Roy of Mokena and Milton of Cable, Wisconsin; six grand children, one sister, Mrs. Hugo Stammer of Chicago and other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon from the home at 1:30 o'clock and were concluded at the St. John Evangelical church. The large edifice was filled to capacity by neighbors and friends who had come to pay their final tributes of respect to the memory of a friend and neighbor whom they all held in high esteem.

Being a lover of flowers in her life time, the deceased was also surrounded by flowers in death, as the casket was set in a veritable bower of gorgeous floral tributes.

Rev. Theodore Haefele, pastor of the church, conducted the funeral services and based his sermon on three favorite Bible passages of the departed.

Mrs. Mable Mall, sang three songs: "In The Beautiful Garden of Prayer", Dvorak's "Going Home" and "Abide With Me."

Interment took place in the family lot in the St. John cemetery south of Mokena.

The influence for good which Mrs. Krapp has left, will long be felt, and her memory will remain as a benediction.

As a special mark of respect, the Mokena State Bank and other business places remained closed during the funeral services. The Mokena public school closed for the afternoon.

Bedtime Story for Children

BILLY MINK MAKES A DISCOVERY

WHEN Billy Mink slipped through the hole under the floor of the shed at the back of the farmer's house, his one thought was to find a comfortable place for a nap. He found it without any trouble. You know Billy is not fussy and he can curl up and sleep almost anywhere. He had stuffed himself so with that fish he had found just outside of the hole that he felt too lazy to explore. So he picked out the first comfortable looking place he came to and there curled up for a nap.

When Billy awoke he couldn't first remember where he was. Then he recalled the fish and how he had slipped in under the shed floor.

"Now I am here, I may as well find out all about this place," thought Billy and got to his feet. He yawned and stretched and then began to run around underneath the floor of the shed, using his nose as he always does. In no time at all a familiar scent tickled his nose. "Ah, ha!" exclaimed Billy Mink. "So this is where those rats came when they left the big barn! I'm not hungry, but I certainly would enjoy a good hunt. I haven't hunted anything bigger than a mouse for ever so long."

Away Billy raced with his nose to the ground, following the scent of a rat. It didn't take him long to find a nest under the shed floor. But there was no one in that nest. The rat smell was very strong, and Billy knew that rats had been there only a short time before. The fact is, the rats who owned that nest had discovered Billy Mink and had promptly moved into the house. Billy eagerly followed the trail. It led him to the hole which led in between the walls of the house. Without hesitating a second, Billy popped through, following that scent. It was a queer place. He had never been in such a place before. But Billy knew that where a rat could go he could go, and so he followed, climbing up between the walls of the house until at last he reached the attic.

He could hear the scampering of many feet, and he could hear the squeaks of fright, so he knew that the rats knew he was there. Once in the attic Billy found the rat scent everywhere. It was useless to try to follow with his nose because the rats had crossed and recrossed each other's paths so often that the trail was all mixed up.

But if Billy couldn't trust to his nose he could trust to his ears. The sound of scampering feet and the frightened squeaks told him where the rats were. His eyes blazed with the eager light of the hunter, and without even a glance at all the

First Aid to the Ailing House

HOUSES WITHOUT CELLARS

FOR economy in construction, it is becoming the custom to build small houses without cellars. One method is to dig trenches for the foundation walls and their footings, and to fill the space between with a concrete slab. For small houses that are light in weight, foundations are not necessary. The slab is some feet larger than the house all around, with the house walls resting on it. With this construction, the slab should have steel reinforcement. With proper methods either plan is satisfactory, and reduces the cost of the house by about 15 per cent—that being the usual relation of the cost of a finished cellar to that of the house. The concrete slab should be waterproof, and should be insulated to prevent the chilling of the finished floor. With foundation walls, the concrete slab should be so firmly bonded to them that cracks cannot develop. One excellent method of bonding is to set reinforcing strips into the walls at the proper level, so that when the concrete slab is poured, it will be rigidly connected to the walls.

The earth should be excavated for eight inches or more, and replaced with cinders, tightly packed and leveled. This will provide a good degree of insulation. For waterproofing, the cinders should be covered with heavy waterproof felt. Adjoining sheets should be overlapped by three inches, and the ends and edges should be carried up the inside of the foundation wall to above the level of the finished floor. The concrete is poured on top. Plenty of time should be allowed for the thorough drying of the concrete before the further finishing of the floor.

Even with this waterproofing of the floor, it will be unsafe to lay a wood floor in direct contact with it, because of possible rotting. When the concrete has dried out, it should be painted with a thick layer of liquid asphalt. While this is still soft, wood flooring is laid on it, and will become firmly bound to the concrete. This method of laying flooring on concrete is coming into common use, and has proved very satisfactory. The layer of asphalt under the wood floor gives springiness. A special form of asphalt known as mastic is made for this particular purpose. Linoleum can be laid on the concrete with the same mastic. Asphalt or rubber tiles can also be used.

In laying a floor slab, provision must be made for water and sewer pipes. Openings should be left around them, so that in the event of trouble they can be reached without breaking into the slab.

PHRASES

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HOW strange the language we repeat,

Passed on as we receive it,
She said she turned into a street;
I hardly could believe it.
When someone says he took a train
I wonder how he hid it.
You'd think the railroad would complain,
Arrest him if he did it.

He phoned he'd give the girl a ring;
He surely didn't mean it.
He never sent or brought a thing,
At least she hasn't seen it.
"I'll make myself a piece of toast,"
She said, and never knew it
Was really something one could boast,
So very few can do it.

"Just push me over Fido's tin,
I'll put some food inside it."
But how astonished she'd have been
If anyone had tried it.
How strange the phrases we employ
At divers times and places—
Yes, even tell a girl and boy
To go wash off their faces.

JEALOUSY has well been termed a "green-eyed" monster." It is a temperamental defect which, when permitted to prey upon the imaginations of those whose love natures are strongly developed, is sure to cause untold yet needless unhappiness. You will find its indications present in many of the hands you analyze.

The Thumb of Jealousy.

Jealousy expresses itself in varied forms. It may be of the fleeting kind which merely momentarily disturbs one's mind and is quickly put to rout. Or it may require long and sound reason before its insistent and devastating influence can be dispelled. Or it may override reason and will altogether.

Ungoverned jealousy is most likely to be indicated by the thumb in which the first, or nail, joint bends easily under pressure toward the wrist, and where the nail tip is broad, untapered and heavily fleshed to the point of being "clubbed."

The first joint of such a thumb is often shorter than the middle joint, although both may be of even lengths, in which case both sections give the impression of being shorter than normal. Or, again, the middle joint may be abnormally slender, index of too rapid deductions made from faulty facts. The third, or palm, joint will always be found prodigiously over-fleshed, pillowed and without symmetry.

The man or woman with jealousy thus indicated, you may be sure, will find the paths of his or her affections often blasted by unhappiness, perhaps by tragedy.

Don't Irritate Gas Bloating

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and irritate your stomach, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomach with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." Most GAS is lodged in the stomach and upper intestine and is due to old poisonous matter in the congested bowels that are loaded with ill-causing bacteria. If your constipation is of long standing, enormous quantities of dangerous bacteria accumulate. Then your digestion is upset. GAS often presses heart and lungs, making life miserable. You can't eat or sleep. Your head aches. Your back aches. Your complexion is sallow and pimply. Your breath is foul. You are a sick, grouchy, wretched, unhappy person. YOUR SYSTEM IS POISONED.

Thousands of sufferers have found in Adlerika the quick, scientific way to rid their systems of harmful bacteria. Adlerika aids you of gas and cleanses foul poisons out of BOTH upper and lower bowels. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika. Get rid of GAS. Adlerika does not gripe — is not habit forming. At all Leading Druggists.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington. — I suppose most members of congress will deny it, but there certainly is every evidence of an agreement, an understanding,

Political Dynamite

to let President Roosevelt's radical court reform legislation stew until the country is heard from. There is no doubt in my mind nor in the minds of other observers here that representatives and senators are anxiously awaiting word from their constituents because if any issue ever was loaded with political dynamite, the plan to pack the Supreme court of the United States with six additional judges surely contains highly explosive elements.

The facts I have mentioned in the above paragraph explain largely why there are so many senators and house members who remain non-committal on the issue. They want to know which way to jump. Actually, I believe as many as half of them are going to try to determine which band wagon they ought to ride—whether they ought to go against the President or for him. In other words, the spot they are now on is not nearly so hot as the one upon which they may find themselves if they guess wrong at this time. No politician will ever jump from the frying pan into the fire knowingly.

In the meantime, the debate rages. Out and out supporters of President Roosevelt, the kind of men who follow him blindly because he is their leader, and the extreme opposition type who are against the President regardless of his position are battling for public attention. The radio is being used to an extent as great, if not greater, than occurred in the last campaign. Those who are committed for or against the President's reform proposition are anxious to sustain their positions and the remainder of the national legislature is egging on the more bold members in order that those who have not made up their minds can take advantage of word from back home.

In the meantime, as well, there are proposals and counter-proposals seeking a compromise. Few of them have any definite merit. Most of them, I believe, are purely and solely representative of floundering minds. Their sponsors entertain hopes that somehow, somewhere they will gain a streak of light that will guide them through to a proper answer politically.

There has been only one plan for giving the federal government more power that can possibly be described as sound. That is the original proposition by Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader of the senate, who announced early in the session of congress that he favored an amendment to the Constitution. While Senator Robinson did not then say so, nor has he said so since, the truth is that he and many others would like to see the people of the country have an opportunity to pass upon any program that would change the country's judiciary. The President regards this method as too slow. He thinks that any changes which he desires ought to be made at once and holds that the tremendous majority by which he was re-elected gives him authority to do so. Yet, as the picture now stands, there is every prospect of considerable delay and from the way I analyze the circumstances, delay will provide the vast majority of voters with an opportunity for determination of the question which is vital in this case: Does the country want to keep an independent system of courts or does it want to establish a precedent by which this administration or any other administration can influence those courts to do the bidding of the nation's Chief Executive?

Through many years and in every year there has been constant criticism of congress for delay in reaching conclusions. It is fortunate, in my opinion, that these delays constitute a part of our governmental system. They allow time for cooling off.

Safety vs. Speed

I think it will be generally agreed that every time legislation is rushed through congress ahead of or as part of an emotional wave among citizens, there has invariably resulted unworkable, if not entirely unsound, statutes. Such is bound to be the result when men and women fail to think things through—when they fail to examine all of the phases of any problem.

President Roosevelt moved quickly, and I believe sincerely, in proposing the NRA and the farm relief plan under the agricultural adjustment administration. Yet, neither of these reform measures stood the test of workability; neither had been drafted upon a proper knowledge of the ends they were to serve and neither did justice to all of the people. It was only natural, therefore, that they should fall by the wayside.

These two laws are cited because they are the outstanding examples of emotional legislation. There are many others, most of them not as bad. But lately one offshoot of the NRA has arisen to plague the administration. I refer to the so-called Walsh-Healey law.

In order to refresh memories, let me explain that the Walsh-Healey law prohibits the federal government from buying products of mills or factories, or any fruit of labor, unless the supplying contractor has complied with the same minimum hours and wages that were a part of the old NRA codes. Unless the contractor agrees to produce the material which the federal government is buying in accordance with those terms, his bid must be rejected under the law.

When the Walsh-Healey law was passed, there were comments heard in several quarters that the time would come when the government itself would regret the legislation. That time has arrived.

Everyone is aware, of course, that Great Britain has started on a naval building program under which it will expend approximately seven and a half billion dollars in the next five years. American policy always has called for matching the British navy ship by ship. Fifteen years ago when the Harding disarmament program was written into treaty form, we destroyed ships so that our tonnage was the same as that of Great Britain. Now, with the world in a turmoil, with Great Britain announcing an unprecedented building program in order to protect its vast colonies and dominion from aggression, the need arises for a building up of our navy again. At least that is Mr. Roosevelt's view and he has wide support for it.

To build up the navy requires vast amounts of steel and other products of industry. Much of the naval building will be done in the navy's own yards. Thus, it has come to pass that the navy has been unable to obtain steel and other equipment since the manufacturers of the needed equipment are not willing to subject themselves to the terms of the Walsh-Healey law. In some instances where the navy has sought to buy material, the manufacturers have refused even to make an offer or state a price at which they would sell the required material and there is a very real possibility that unless the Walsh-Healey law is repealed or dodged, our navy building program may have to come to a halt.

Unable to Get Steel

The reason for this condition is that the Walsh-Healey law, with its prescription on minimum hours of labor and wages would place a burden on industry that it cannot bear and return its cost of production. The government, as a buyer, is a tough customer in any event. Its specifications are always more difficult than is the practice in industry. Add to that, then, the requirement that men may work only 30 hours a week and that their pay shall not be reduced from the rate of their compensation when they were working 40 hours a week and you have burdened any manufacturing establishment with a load that will break its back.

Right now, the Navy department is trying to find a way to get around the provisions of the Walsh-Healey law. President Roosevelt has said nothing publicly concerning his attitude but there are many who believe he himself feels the law is not working out the way it was intended. It is quite a distance, of course, from the Walsh-Healey law to the present controversy under Mr. Roosevelt's plan to pack the Supreme court with six new judges if one stops his examination of the two questions at the surface. It is not difficult, however, to see a direct connection. The Walsh-Healey law was driven through congress in haste. The bad effects of it are coming now two years after its enactment. If the Supreme court reform proposal is driven through as quickly and with as little examination as the Walsh-Healey law, we will reap the reward sooner or later and probably for many years to come.

"Gnu" of Hottentot Origin

The name "gnu" is of Hottentot origin, and was in use by natives when white settlers first went to South Africa. The name "wildebeest" is a Dutch word meaning wild ox, and probably originated on account of the animal's habit of prancing and capering in antics suggesting those of a bull enraged by toradors in a Spanish arena. It is said that the Boers, in early days, found that a red cloth excited these antelopes and was frequently used in hunting them. In addition to the white-tailed gnu, there is a species known as the brindled gnu or blue wildebeest, which is abundant in East-central Africa. Gnus have disproportionately large heads which give them a grotesque appearance. They have maned necks and distinctive tufts of hair on their faces. The bulls stand about four feet tall at the shoulders. The general color of the white-tailed species is a deep brown. Their horns are formidable weapons and under certain conditions the animals are dangerous.

Miss Eppa

MISS EPPA held fourteen pins between her teeth. This did not interfere with her conversation with Mrs. Humbolt, on whose expansive hips she was fitting a skirt, for Miss Eppa could talk, no matter what she was doing.

"Elsie Murphy brought me fifteen yards of white lace yesterday." Miss Eppa's colorless lips pressed on the pins and her pale eyes lifted to Mrs. Humbolt's passive face. "Guess she'll marry Tyree after all!"

"You mean Warren Phelps, don't you?" Miss Eppa bristled. "I mean Donald Tyree! I saw 'em at the hedge last night!" She nodded toward the window to designate which hedge. "She kissed him! Then she ran down the road a-kickin' up dust!... all happy and hussy-like! But he didn't follow her, you can bet! No sir! Not that one! But if it's Warren Phelps she's marrying. Of course, Mrs. Humbolt, when you go to Mrs. Phelps' canning bee this afternoon, don't mention nothing... Warren being her son..."

"Of course...not!" But Miss Eppa knew by the positive note that Mrs. Humbolt would tell Mrs. Gavy and when Mrs. Gavy knew a thing, well...just about all Germington would know!

Mrs. Humbolt's skirt was finished and on the ironing board when Miss Eppa heard two short rings and one long. That was Mrs. Waverley's call. She glanced swiftly at the clock over the pince-nez, for Miss Eppa was near-sighted, and clucked her tongue against her teeth. It was a satisfying sound for her teeth were false and a little loose. That ring, at four-thirty, meant that Mrs. Gavy was home from the canning bee.

Miss Eppa skipped across the room to the telephone, for she was brisk now in her new excitement, and softly lifted the receiver from the hook. Mrs. Gavy was telling Mrs. Waverley that Elsie Murphy had stood kissing Donald Tyree for an hour or more, right smack in front of Miss Eppa's door!

Miss Eppa voiced a mental "Tsk! Tsk!" She wanted to shout into the mouthpiece. "Not door, Mrs. Gavy! The hedge!"

At this point a bell pierced the alive silence of the bungalow and Miss Eppa nodded an exasperated head, replaced the receiver carefully and tiptoed to the door.

Elsie Murphy was no different. She trembled visibly on the fuzzy-brown welcome mat, her blue eyes dancing, her hair the burnt gold of the sunflowers that lined the pebble walk.

"I... came... about my dress." Elsie Murphy always hesitated in her speech, even when she wasn't startled.

"Not today!" Miss Eppa's lips were tight enough to bend a pin.

Elsie fingered the belt of the blue checkered gingham that Miss Eppa had made. "I'll... come... in the morning... Miss Eppa," Elsie offered meekly, closing the white-washed gate behind her.

Mrs. Warman had hung up when Miss Eppa sneaked the receiver off the hook. But in a few minutes she listened to Mrs. Gavy and Mrs. Krunch and then to Mrs. Humbolt and Mrs. Waverley. By seven o'clock her arms were so stiff that she gave up the idea of a cooked supper but made, instead, a sandwich, a pineapple salad and nibbled at a square of mouse-trap cheese, as she called it; all out of the ice-box without troubling herself to set the table. When the telephone shrilled a long and a short, which was her own number, she scuttled, like a frightened doe, from the kitchen to the hall and answered.

Elsie's mother, who didn't recognize Miss Eppa's garbled voice, started to hang up but Miss Eppa, who had completely masticated the cheese, said quickly, "It's me, Mrs. Murphy!" A talk with Mrs. Murphy at this time could be mighty interesting! It was, too, for Mrs. Murphy began,

"It's about Elsie, Miss Eppa. She won't be needin' that lace dress. She and Warren Phelps... they've... quarreled. You know how children are."

That night Miss Eppa, a strange worried expression on her gaunt features, seated herself in the red plush chair by the table lamp and sat quite rigid for a moment. She was deciding a problem because her thin forefinger, tapping on the chair-arm, was the only thing about her that moved.

Then she got up briskly and went to the hall telephone and rang two shorts and four longs. When Mrs. Phelps answered in a troubled voice, Miss Eppa began, "Mrs. Phelps, I hear Elsie Murphy and Warren have broke off. We—il... if it's about that Donald Tyree gossip... out in front of my hedge... it wasn't Elsie kissin' him but one of those common girls from over to the hollow."

Miss Eppa stood close by the sewing room window after that watching Mrs. Phelps' house and when the slim dark shadow of Warren darted out of the back door in a direct line for Murphy's bungalow, Miss Eppa puckered her lips in a relieved, "Thank heavens for that!"

Lesson for March 7

LIFE HERE AND HEREAFTER THROUGH CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—John 14:1-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. John 14:6.
PRIMARY TOPIC—In the Heavenly Father's House.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Many Mansions.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why We Need Christ Always.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Life Here and Hereafter through Christ.

It was the night before the darkest day in the world's history. On the morrow the Son of man was to hang on Calvary's tree for the sins of the world—for your sins, and for mine. But for the moment he was alone with his disciples. The last Passover had been eaten together, the betrayer had been discovered, and the Lord had told them that he was soon to go where they could not follow. Peter had, by his bold self-assurance, brought forth the prophecy of his denial. The disciples were disturbed. Then came from the Saviour the words of comfort, assurance, and power which have been the strength and solace of his people through all the centuries. Our life both here and hereafter is in His mighty hands.

I. Comfort (vv. 1-3).
Troubled hearts are everywhere—in the palace and in the cottage, on land and sea. There is a place of rest, thank God! There is One who still speaks the majestic words, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me."

His comfort is one which covers the future life, for he says:
1. "I go to prepare a place" (v. 2). Concern about future destiny is settled at once when Christ Jesus becomes our Lord and Saviour. We need worry no longer. He has gone on before to the Father's house to prepare a place for his own. When we come to that ever-peaceful shore we shall not come as strangers, but as sons and daughters to a prepared place in our Father's house.

2. "I will come again" (v. 3) is the word that gives present meaning to the future promise. He not only prepares the place, but he it is who brings us there. The glorious hope of his coming again is the Christian's greatest comfort and mightiest incentive to useful, holy living.

II. Assurance (vv. 4-11).
The doctrine of Christian assurance is one of vital importance, and should be taught in all its scriptural power and beauty. Unfortunately it has so suffered violence at the hands of some of its friends that others have not only come to fear it, but even openly to oppose it. This is most regrettable, for it is manifest that until one has assurance he will make but little progress in Christian usefulness.

The believers assurance rests fundamentally on Christ himself. Two grounds are given in the text.

1. "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (v. 6). These words are their own best commentary. Read them again, slowly, weighing the meaning of each word. If we are in him who is the way, how safe we are! If we are not in him? Read his own solemn words in verse 6, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." (v. 11).

In Christ dwells all the fullness of the Godhead. He is not only a supernatural being, he is God. How can anyone deny that and read his words in these verses? To do so is to make Jesus a liar and blasphemer.

III. Power (vv. 12-15).

His followers are not left in a world of sin and need as a little group of hymn-singing weaklings, thinking only of the day when they shall be in a brighter land. Ah, yes, they sing hymns and rejoice in them; they look for a better land; their weapons of warfare are not carnal—but weaklings? Oh, no! God uses them to do great and mighty things for his glory.

1. "He that believeth" (v. 12). This army of God carries the royal banner of faith.

2. "Greater works... shall he do" (v. 12). Jesus only began his work on earth. Its greatest development was to be the joyous privilege of his followers.

3. "If ye ask... I will do" (v. 14). Someone has called this a signed blank check on all the resources of God. Faith fills it in, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Moody knew how to use it. So did Mueller, Livingstone, J. Hudson Taylor—the list might go on indefinitely. Shall we dare to trust God and add our name as one of those who ask in faith?

The Man of Wisdom

He is a wise man who does not grieve for the things which he has lost, but rejoices for those which he has.—Epictetus.

Thoughts of Good People

The thoughts of some people live so near to God, that to ask them to think of us is to ask them to pray for us.

Chief End of Education

Manhood, not scholarship, is the first aim of education.—E. T. Seton.

First Stirrings of Spring

THE chic young miss above, center, says, "I make my own clothes. I learned sewing from Mother first, got a touch of it in school, and a real exposure in 4-H activities. I choose this dress for Spring because it looks like Spring, and because it takes the minimum of time and money. Puff sleeves and princess lines give a formal note if I wish to impress the folks (which I often do) and the peplum jacket is added for frivolous reasons—when I want to feel a bit sophisticated, and it makes a sweet all-occasion dress."

A Practical Choice.

The Lady on the Left says, "I'm practical. I choose patterns that I can cut twice; then I have a gingham gown to set me off in my kitchen and an afternoon dress in which to entertain the Maggie-Jiggs club. The all-of-a-piece yoke and sleeves make me look years younger, the shirred pockets give the decorative note every dress needs, and I can run it up in an afternoon."

Three-Purpose Pattern.

The Girl in the Oval has a far-away look in her eyes. She says it's because she wears glamorous blouses like this one. She cuts her pattern three times—no less—and evolves a blouse in eggshell for her velvet skirt; one in velveteen for her tweeds, and the third in metallic cloth for after-five activities. "The skirt with its simple well directed lines is equally well suited to tweeds for sport, velvet for dress and wool for business," says Madam.

The Patterns.
Pattern 1832 (above left) comes in sizes 32 to 44. Size 34 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1263 (above center) is designed in sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material for the dress and 2¼ yards for the jacket—to line it requires 2¼ yards of 35 inch material.

PTA room last Friday evening with 22 members present.

Mrs. Pearle Henke gave a short resume of George Washington's life.

Make it a point to study the Constitution By-Laws, and Standing Rules of your Department, your District and your Unit quotes Marg
West, our Unit Constitution and By-Laws chairman. These by-laws and standing rules are the traffic signs that keep your Unit on the right road to Harmony. Next meeting Mrs. West will explain further these rules, in the meantime lets do as she says, and study them.

Mrs. Rowden, Unit Rehabilitation
Chairman, sent 5 decks of playing cards to Anna hospital. Geographical magazines are needed and carpet rags 1 1/2 to 2 inches wide. Don't forget those old silk hose girls. A prize will be given to the one bringing in the largest number of pairs.

Our Child Welfare chairman, lady working as chairman of Flood Relief for the Unit. She reports a good sum realized from Circus and fare of America's children will continue to occupy an important part in work.

The American Legion Service

nery, our Legislative chairman.

We are 100 per cent on our membership and have 53 members to date

Some of our members have already taken advantage of the opportunity to make a lasting Easter gift to their church in the form of new hymn books. The church hopes to have thirty of these new hymn books ready to be dedicated Palm Sunday morning. It is therefore necessary that the money for the books be in the hands of either Mr.
E. B. Campbell, Mr. Devoll or the pastor within the next five days.
They cost just one dollar a piece and some families have taken this opportunity to give several. A bookplate will be placed inside the cover of each hymnal bearing the name of the donor or some loved one that the book is given as a memorial to.
We are far from reaching our goal of thirty. Let us all think deeply and act promptly on this matter.

Sunday morning the sermon will be "The Two Foundations". Let us make a special attempt to make our church attendance regular throughout the rest of the Lenten season.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Mr. Editor:

For the past several weeks I've been reading the letters appearing in the "Letters to the Editor" column and have heard considerable comment about them. Some comments were fun-making some critical and others contained good sound advice.

I'd like to suggest to these letter writers that they come out in the open instead of hiding behind assumed names. Why fear having people know your opinion on a matter that is of real interest to many of us?

Its about time that these letter writers get together and act as a committee to call a mass meeting of all the people interested. Have a good open discussion and then perhaps something worth while can be accomplished.

Let's hear from you, "A Citizen", "Old Hickory" and "Uncle Dudley" about setting the time and place for such a meeting and start the ball rolling.

George J. Rinke

Salt Lake City's Water Supply

Salt Lake City's water supply up to 1931 was entirely gravity, the supply being obtained from 5 canyon streams flowing from the Wasatch mountains.

There are three small storage reservoirs namely, Mt. Dell, with a capacity of 1,145,000,000 gallons, Twin Lake, 306,000,000 gallons, Lake Mary 242,000,000 gallons. The first water was piped into the city from City Creek Canyon about 1871. The plant has always been municipal ly owned.

The gravity supply failed to furnish the adequate supply in 1931 at which time the city acquired a group of flowing wells about 7 miles south east of the city. The water from these wells increased the city's water supply by 7,000,000 gallons.

Early this spring it was found that there was going to be a serious water shortage all over the state due to the very low precipitation. At this time many deep wells were drilled to further augment the city's supply. This method has been extremely successful. The present development is furnishing forty-six second feet. To get this water into the high pressure main booster pumps are used. These wells are used for emergency purposes and are capable of supplying from 30 to 60 per cent of the peak demand.

On account of the watersheds being used for recreation purposes it is necessary to sterilize all surface supplies. The methods of purification is by the Ammonia-Chlorine process, no filtration being needed. The chlorine dosage is controlled by a field test known as the Ortho-Tolid-in test.

To the average person water is water and nothing else-something that satisfies thirst-commonplace and much the same everywhere. And because water is necessary as the air we breathe, we are prone to accept it as we do air, a gift of the Gods. Yet while no one is called upon to satisfy a City with air, some one must provide its water and the big water must be as pure as the air and as limitless in supply.

Salt Lake City's water supply is from near-by canyon streams and wells. There are six of these mountain streams and in case of emergency, the flow from nine pump wells and 95 artesian wells, south of the city may be used.

With the exception of the wells, all other supplies flow by gravity into the distribution system and thence to the consumer.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE PROPOSED DRIVERS' LICENSE LAW.

This is the first of a series of articles containing Questions and Answers pertaining to the proposed Drivers' License Law and Financial Responsibility Act, sponsored as an important forward step in Governor Henry Horner's Safety Campaign.

If you have questions to ask about the proposed law, address them to Director F. Lynden Smith of the Department of Public Works and Buildings, Capitol Building, Springfield.

Who will be required to have an operator's license?

All persons wishing to drive a motor vehicle, except chauffeurs, certain non-residents, and those persons while operating a motor vehicle in the service of the army, navy or marine corps of the United States.

Who will be required to have a chauffeur's license?

Any person whose principal occupation is that of operating a motor vehicle as a mechanic or employee, or who directly or indirectly receives pay or compensation for any work or services in connection with the operation of a motor vehicle for the transportation of passengers or merchandise for hire.

Will it be necessary to have a license to operate farm machinery?

No. The law specifically exempts operators of farm tractors or other implements of husbandry temporarily drawn on the highways.

What is the minimum age requirement?

Fifteen.

Does every member of a family need a driver's license?

Yes. Every member of the family wishing to drive an automobile must be licensed.

Suppose I have a driver's license and own a Buick, may I use it while driving a Ford?

Yes. Ownership of automobiles has nothing to do with the driver's license. The only difference is the type of vehicle driven is that a chauffeur's license instead of a driver's license.

Will all persons now driving be required to obtain a license?

Yes. Every Illinois citizen driving an automobile after December 31, 1937, on the public highways must have a driver's license.

Is an examination required for a driver's license?

All persons applying for a license between October 1, 1937 will be granted a license without examination who furnishes satisfactory evidence that he is qualified to drive a motor vehicle safely, otherwise he must be examined. All applicants applying for an original license on and after January 1, 1938, must submit to an operation.

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

By Ralph E. Church, Illinois Representative in Congress

The opposition to the President's Supreme Court proposal claim they now have enough votes out of the possible 96 in the United States Senate to defeat the plan. The proponents, on the other hand, are claiming a sure victory. Each side repeats its exaggerated claims whenever another Senator publicly announces his position.

Both claims are simply statements for home consumption. No one really knows what the results would be were a vote taken today. It is doubtful that any one will know until the roll is called and the Senators answer to their names with 'aye' or 'nay'. At that time there will probably be about 10 or 12 Senators who have remained non-committal thru-out the entire discussion, and it will probably be this small group which will cast the deciding votes.

One thing is now certain. During the past week the opposition gained enough strength to prevent the use of the cloture rule to limit the debate. There is unlimited debate in the Senate and by filibustering tactics a small group of Senators can prevent a bill coming to a vote unless the cloture rule is applied. It immediately stops the discussion and causes a vote.

To employ the cloture rule a two-thirds concurrence of the Senators is necessary. At least 33 Senators have definitely announced their opposition to the President's proposal. It is therefore certain that the Administration leadership will be powerless to stop any filibustering tactics which may be used by the opposition. Such tactics may force a compromise, which the President now seems unwilling to make.

That is the parliamentary situation as it exists today. To-morrow it may be completely changed. We cannot be certain that if and when the Committee on Judiciary reports the bill it will be in the same form as introduced. It may, for example, be amended to allow the appointment of only two instead of six additional Supreme Court judges. That may be acceptable to some who are now opposing the President. Perhaps also, although it seems very unlikely, some of the seated justices will meanwhile resign.

In arriving at our own personal judgment on the recommendation of the President it behooves us, first of all, to examine the reasons he presented for making it. Our efforts should not be deliberately directed toward seeking to answer his arguments but rather to discovering their relative merit. Alongside the reasons for the change are to be placed the reasons against it.

To do otherwise in any analysis of the question before us is to be dishonest with oneself. The feudal doctrine that the "King can do no wrong" has long since been discarded. And there is no basis for the "President Roosevelt can do no wrong" attitude any more than there is for the attitude that the "Supreme Court can do no wrong." Yet there are those who, unconsciously or consciously look at the issue in just that light.

What, then, are the objectives and the reasons offered by President Roosevelt and his spokesmen for the proposal? What is their relative merit?

As set forth in the President's Message and as presented in the discussions on the floor of the House and Senate, they can be summarized substantially as follows: 1. To lighten the burden of the Supreme Court and thereby speed up justice 2. To vitalize the Court with young blood, and 3, to secure a different interpretation of the Constitution. And among the major arguments in support of the changes is the frequent statement that the size of the Supreme Court has been changed in the past on several occasions.

In this column during the coming weeks I propose to discuss each of these contentions somewhat in detail. Upon those three or four points the whole argument in behalf of the Supreme Court change rests.

Frankfort Woman With Malta Fever

A case of Malta fever, commonly known as undulant fever, was reported the past week at the Silver Cross Hospital in Joliet. The patient is Mrs. Alfred Heisner, 32 years old, who lives with her husband on a farm two and a half miles southwest of the village of Frankfort.

Mrs. Heisner was taken to the hospital by Dr. Walter Hedges, who said it was the second case of the rare fever he has seen in the 29 years he has been practicing in Frankfort.

The fever is contracted by drinking raw milk from cows infected with a peculiar disease. An infected cow has been found on the Heisner farm, Doctor Hedges said.

Temperature Rises and Falls
Mrs. Heisner suffered the first symptoms of the fever three weeks ago, but thought she had the flu and did not call a physician until a week later. Unable to diagnose the case at the farm home, Doctor Hedges ordered Mrs. Heisner taken to Silver Cross hospital two weeks ago, where it was discovered she had undulant fever.

The fever derives its common name from the fact that the patient temperature undulates falling to normal of 98.6 degrees for a few hours, rising quickly to 105, then dropping again. Treatment usually continues for a year or longer. Frequently it recurs after dormant periods, with blood tests showing no positive reaction. It seldom is fatal.

Responds to Serum
Doctor Hedges said that Mrs. Heisner is responding favorably to vaccines which he is administering. The vaccine is prepared from cows, and is given gradually, in increasing doses, 2 of 1 cc the first day, 4 of 1 cc a few days later and finally 1 full cc.

At the hospital, Mrs. Heisner has a private room and is served on her own personal dishes, and there is no danger of infection to others.

Hospital officials told Doctor Hedges that Mrs. Heisner is the first undulant fever patient ever confined there. The physician said that several years ago there was a case in Morris.

The fever may be contracted from drinking milk from infected cows, or from raw pork. It is quite common in the Mediterranean countries where goats' milk is a popular drink.

A. F. Mather, a salesman employed by the Joliet Buick Company, has been confined to his home in Plainfield since last October with a fever also diagnosed as "undulant." He is under the care of a Chicago physician.

Home Is Woman's Ideal Niche

The home still is a woman's greatest field of achievement, Dr. Walter A. Maier declared Sunday in his weekly address over the coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour network. Speaking on the subject "The American Womanhood for Christ," Dr. Maier said woman's greatness lies not in political pre-eminence, airplane flights, stage success, literary distinction, business leadership or social acclaim, but in her hallowed devotion of the home.

"Popular appraisal of woman's greatness reveals a curious trend of the modern mind according to which a woman is regarded as pre-eminent not because she is a good mother and a faithful wife, but often because her achievements and ideals are noted for the conspicuous absence of these highest womanly attainments. Three thousand years ago the author of the book of Proverbs settled the question of woman's greatness by bestowing the palm of distinction to a God-fearing mother, the woman who was patiently concerned about her husband, her home, her children.

"One of the greatest fields of woman's service and distinction has been the energetic and faithful support which Christian women have lent to the cause of the Church. As the Gospel of Christ raised womanhood to new and unparalleled standards, so women, in turn, have contributed mightily to the progress of the Church. The first convert for Christianity in Europe was a woman and today many a congregation thrives under divine blessings, particularly because of the generous service rendered by devoted women.

Huge Used Car Sale Launched

Approximately $2,500,000 worth of used cars and trucks are offered "at drastically reduced prices" in a state-wide pre-inventory sale to be embarked on this week by Ford dealers throughout the Chicago branch of the Ford Motor Company.

More than 11,000 used car "trade-ins"—the combined inventories of approximately 350 dealers—are involved in the sale, according to W. K. Edmunds, manager of the Chicago branch of the Ford Company.

"This undoubtedly is the biggest used car operation ever carried on collectively by any group of dealers," said Mr. Edmunds. "Ford dealers are 'clearing the decks' for what we believe will be a record Spring season for new car sales."

All types, makes and models—all used cars and trucks in dealers' stocks—are included in the sale. Many bear the exclusive Ford "R & G" (renewed and guaranteed) emblem—cars that have been thoroughly reconditioned and carry a written money-back guarantee.

The sale will continue throughout March.

VFW IN COUNTER ATTACK AGAINST COMMUNISM

The fact that only some 50,000 votes were cast for Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President in the recent election, should not be taken as a true indication of the growing strength of the red menace in this country. As a matter of record, more than two million residents of the United States are self-confessed Communists and many of them participating in a highly financed, skillfully standardized movement against existing American institutions and form of government.

Communist autocracy is waging scientific warfare against America under the direction of a general staff. A struggle of survival is on between the bloody autocracy of Communism and our free institutions laboriously evolved through centuries. Millions of persons in the United States are being infected by organized penetration from abroad. Urged on by a new class hatred, and by want, they have well-matured plans to seize the wealth of the country and to do away with the institutions that stand in their way.

Major objectives of the Communists in America include a controlled scarcity of production; a mass psychology of organized pacifism; undermining public faith in the Constitution and the Supreme Court; fomenting of class hatreds, and subversive propaganda among the youth and educational institutions of the country. One of the five points of the V.F.W. 1936-1937 program provides for the protection and promotion of Americanism, with vigorous opposition to subversive forces, and with more restrictive alien legislation. "We are mobilizing our membership in a constant counter-offensive against all who would overthrow our American system of government by violence or force of arms."

We believe that alien agitators who advocate armed revolution and violate resistance to law and order should be deported. We believe that immigration of aliens seeking employment should be restricted until America's unemployment problems are definitely solved and we favor stricter regulations that will make certain that America does not become the dumping ground for the undesirables of other nations.

GARDEN CLUB NEWS

To me Spring seems a little dog,
A little dog astray;
She comes along our alley to Find some place she can stay.
But then the March wind catches her;

That play boy of the year
A can attached to her tail,
And Spring is gone from here!

The regular meeting of the garden club was held at the home of Mrs. Fred Rauch. Roll was answered by each one, who responded with a short talk on New plants and Seed Planting.

Perhaps it is hard for some to think of seed planting at this time of the year but it is not unusual. Seed planting may begin as early as February. Select seeds which are slowest in germinating and those which must get a very early start if they are to come into reasonably early bloom. Prepare a soil mixture of one-third peatmoss, one-third sand and one-third common garden loam. Plant carefully selected seeds according to directions and watch with delight—your little house garden.

The club has definitely taken over the project of cleaning and planting the site on which the old school house stood. As soon as the weather permits, the work will be undertaken by the members. Outside co-operation would be greatly appreciated.

The Young People's Bridge Club was entertained by Erwin McGovney last Friday evening. THE GARDEN MURDER CASE

SYNOPSIS

Philo Vance, famous detective, and John F. X. Markham, district attorney for New York county, are dining in a restaurant when Vance receives an anonymous telephone message informing him of a "disturbing psychological tension at Professor Ephraim Garden's apartment" advising that he read up on radio-active sodium, consult a passage in the Aeneid and, counseling that "Equanimity is essential." Professor Garden is famous in chemical research. The message, decoded by Vance, reminds him that Professor Garden's son, Floyd, is addicted to horse-racing. Vance says that "Equanimity is a horse running next day in the Rivermont handicap. Vance is convinced that the message was sent by Dr. Siefert, the Gardens' family physician. He arranges to have lunch next day at the Gardens' penthouse. Vance is greeted by Floyd Garden and meets Lowe Hamme, an elderly follower of horse racing. Floyd expresses concern over Swift's queer actions. Mrs. Garden, supposedly ill, comes downstairs and places a $100 bet on a horse. Gathered around an elaborate loud speaker service, listening to the racing are Cecil Kroon, Madge Weatherby and Zalia Graem, who bet varying amounts on the race. There is tension under the surface gaiety. Zalia and Swift are not on speaking terms. Kroon leaves to keep an appointment before the race starts. Miss Beeton, a nurse, and Vance bet on "Equanimity" and goes to the roof garden to hear the results. Floyd follows Swift, remaining away several minutes. Zalia Graem answers a phone call in the den. Soon after the announcement that "Azure Star" wins, the guests hear a shot. Vance finds Swift dead, shot through the head with a revolver nearby. He says Swift has been murdered. After calling the police, he finds the door of a vault ajar. Kroon returns and is sharply questioned by Vance, who finds he had not left the building. Vance orders Miss Beeton to guard the stairway and prevent Mrs. Garden and Zalia from viewing Swift's body. Floyd Garden admits the revolver belongs to his father. Further questioning by Vance reveals that the revolver had been found recently by Beeton in the presence of the other guests. Floyd hints that Swift bet so recklessly because of Zalia. Markham, Sergeant Heath and two detectives arrive. Markham and Sergeant Heath scorn the murder theory.

Markham meditated on this for several moments.

"Still, Vance," he said at length, "reasonable objections could be raised to all the points you have brought up. They are based almost entirely on theory and not on demonstrable facts."

"From a legal point of view, you're right," Vance conceded. "And if these had been my only reasons for believing that a crime had been committed, I wouldn't have summoned you and the doctory sergeant. But, even so, Markham, I can assure you the few drops of blood you see on the chapie's temple could not have thickened to the extent they had when I first saw the body—they must have been exposed to the air for several minutes. And, as I say, I was up here approximately thirty seconds after we heard the shot."

"But that being the case," returned Markham in astonishment, "how can you possibly explain the fact?"

Vance straightened a little and looked at the district attorney with unwonted gravity.

"Swift," he said, "was not killed by the shot we heard."

"That don't make sense to me, Mr. Vance," Heath interposed, scowling.

"Just a moment, Sergeant," Vance nodded to him in friendly fashion. "When I realized that the shot that wiped out this johnnie's existence was not the shot that we had heard, I tried to figure out where the fatal shot could have been fired without our hearing it below. And I've found the place. It was in a vault-like store-room—practically sound-proof, I should say—on the other side of the passageway that leads to the study. I found the door unlocked and looked for evidence of some activity there . . ."

Markham had risen and taken a few nervous steps around the pool in the center of the roof.

"Did you find any evidence," he asked, "to corroborate your theory?"

"Yes—unmistakable evidence," Vance walked over to the still figure in the chair and pointed to the thick-lensed glasses tipped forward on the nose. "To begin with, Markham, you will notice that Swift's glasses are in a position far from normal, indicating that they were put on hurriedly and inaccurately by someone else—just as was the head-phon."

Markham and Heath leaned over and peered at the glasses.

"Well, Mr. Vance," agreed the sergeant, "they certainly don't look as if he had put 'em on himself."

Markham straightened up, compressed his lips, and nodded slowly. "All right," he said, "what else?"

"Perpend, Markham," Vance pointed with his cigarette. "The left lens of the glasses—the one furthest from the punctured temple—is cracked at the corner, and there's a very small V-shaped piece missing where the crack begins—an indication that the glasses have been dropped and nicked. I can assure you that the lens was neither cracked nor nicked when I last saw Swift alive."

"Couldn't he have dropped his glasses on the roof here?" asked Heath.

"Possible of course, Sergeant," Vance returned. "But he didn't. I carefully looked over the tiles round the chair, and the missing bit of glass was not there."

Markham looked at Vance shrewdly.

"And perhaps you know where it is."

"Yes—oh, yes," Vance nodded. "That's why I urged you to come here. That piece of glass is at present in my waistcoat pocket."

Markham showed a new interest. "Where did you find it?" he demanded brusquely.

"I found it," Vance told him, "on the tiled floor in the vault across the hall. And it was near some scattered papers which could easily have been knocked to the floor by some one falling against them."

Markham's eyes opened incredulously.

"I'm beginning to see why you wanted me and the sergeant here," he said slowly. "But what I don't understand, Vance, is that second shot that you heard. How do you account for it?"

Vance drew deeply on his cigarette.

"Markham," he answered, with quiet seriousness; "when we know how and by whom that second shot—which was obviously intended for us to hear—was fired, we will know who murdered Swift . . ."

At this moment the nurse appeared in the doorway leading to the roof. With her was Doctor Doremus, and behind the medical examiner were Captain Dubois and Detective Bellamy, the finger-print men, and Peter Quackenbush, the official police photographer.

Miss Beeton indicated our presence on the roof and made her way back downstairs.

Doremus acknowledged our joint greetings with a breezy wave of the hand.

He made a cursory examination of the limp figure, scrutinized the bullet hole, tested the arms and legs for rigor mortis, and then swung about to face the rest of us.

"Well, what about it?" he asked, in his easy cynical manner. "He's dead; shot in the head with a small-caliber bullet; and the lead's probably lodged in the brain. No exit hole. Looks as if he'd decided to shoot himself. There's nothing here to contradict the assumption. The bullet went into the temple, and is at the correct angle. Furthermore, there are powder marks, showing that the gun was held at very close range—almost a contact wound, I should say. There's an indication of singeing around the orifice."

He Made a Cursory Examination of the Limp Figure.

Vance took the cigarette from his mouth and addressed Doremus.

"I say doctor; speakin' of the blood on the johnnie's temple, what would you say about the amount?"

"Two damned little, I'd say," Doremus returned promptly. "But bullet wounds have a queer way of acting sometimes. Anyway, there ought to be a lot more gore."

"Precisely," Vance nodded. "My theory is that he was shot elsewhere and brought to this chair."

Doremus made a wry face. "Was shot? Then you don't think it was suicide?" He pondered a moment. "It could be, of course."

He decided finally. "Find the rest of the blood and you'll probably know where his death occurred."

"Thanks awfully, doctor," Vance smiled faintly. "That did flash through my mind, don't y' know; but I believe the blood was wiped up. I was merely hopin' that your findings would substantiate my theory that he did not shoot himself while sitting in that chair, without any one else around."

Doremus shrugged indifferently. "That's reasonable enough assumption," he said. "There really ought to be more blood. He died instantly."

"Have you any other suggestions?" asked Vance.

"I may have when I've gone over the body more carefully after these babies"—he waved his hand toward the photographer and the finger-print men—"finish their hocus-pocus."

Captain Dubois and Detective Bellamy had already begun their routine, with the telephone table as the starting-point; and Quackenbush was adjusting his metal tripod.

Vance turned to Dubois. "I say,

Captain, give your special attention to the head-phon, the revolver, and the glasses. Also the door-knob of the vault across the hall inside."

Quackenbush, his camera having been set up, took his pictures and then waited by the passageway door for further instructions from the finger-print officers.

When the three men had gone inside, Doremus drew in an exaggerated sigh and spoke to Heath impatiently.

"How about getting your corpus delicti over on the settee? Easier to examine him there."

"O. K., Doc."

Two detectives lifted Swift's limp body and placed it on the same wicker divan where Zalia Graem had lain when she collapsed at the sight of the dead man.

Doremus went to work in his usual swift and efficient fashion. When he had finished the task, he threw a steamer rug over the dead man, and made a brief report to Vance and Markham.

"There's nothing to indicate a violent struggle, if that's what you're hoping for. But there's a slight abrasion on the bridge of the nose, as if his glasses had been jerked off; and there's a slight bump on the left side of his head, over the ear, which may have been caused by a blow of some kind, though the skin hasn't been broken."

"How, doctor," asked Vance, "would the following theory square with your findings—that the man had been shot elsewhere, had fallen to a tiled floor, striking his head against it sharply, that his glasses had been torn off when the left lens came in contact with the floor, and that he was carried out here to the chair, and the glasses replaced on his nose?"

Doremus pursed his lips and inclined his head thoughtfully.

"That would be a very reasonable explanation of the lump on his head and the abrasion on the bridge of his nose . . . So this is another of your cock-eyed murders, is it? Well, it's all right with me. But I'll tell you right now, you won't get an autopsy report tonight. I'm bored and need excitement; and I'm going to Madison Square Garden."

He made out an order for the removal of the body, readjusted his hat, waved a friendly good-by which included all of us, and disappeared swiftly through the door into the passageway.

Vance led the way into the study, and the rest of us followed him. We were barely seated when Captain Dubois came in and reported that there were no finger-prints on any of the objects Vance had enumerated.

"Handled with gloves," he finished laconically, "or wiped clean."

Vance thanked him. "I'm not in the least surprised," he added.

Dubois rejoined Bellamy and Quackenbush in the hall, and the three made their way down the stairs.

"Well, Vance, are you satisfied?" Markham asked.

Vance nodded. "I hadn't expected any fingerprints. Cleverly thought-out crime. And what Doremus found fills some vacant spots in my own theory. Stout fella, Doremus, understands his business. He knows what is wanted and looks for it. There can be no question that Swift was in the vault when he was shot; that he fell to the floor, brushing down some of the papers; that he struck his head on the tiled floor, and broke the left lens of his glasses—you noted, of course, that the lump on his head is also on the left side—and that he was dragged into the garden and placed in the chair. Swift was a small, slender man; probably didn't weigh over a hundred and twenty pounds; and it would have been no great feat of strength for someone to have thus transported him after death . . ."

There were footsteps in the corridor and, as our eyes involuntarily turned toward the door, we saw the dignified elderly figure of Professor Ephraim Garden. I recognized him immediately from pictures I had seen.

He was a tall man, despite his stooped shoulders; and, though he was very thin, he possessed a firmness of bearing which made one feel that he had retained a great measure of the physical power that had obviously been his in youth. There was benevolence in the somewhat haggard face, but there was also shrewdness in his gaze; and the contour of his mouth indicated a latent hardness.

He bowed to us with an old-fashioned graciousness and took a few steps into the study.

"My son has just informed me," he said in a slightly querulous voice, "of the tragedy that has occurred here this afternoon. I'm sorry that I did not return home earlier, as is my wont on Saturdays, for in that event the tragedy might have been averted. I myself would have been in the study here and would probably have kept an eye on my nephew. In any event, no one could then have got possession of my revolver."

"I am not at all sure, Doctor Garden," Vance returned grimly, "that your presence here this afternoon would have averted the tragedy. It is not nearly so simple a matter as it appears at first glance."

Professor Garden sat down in a chair of antique workmanship near the door and, clasping his hands tightly, leaned forward.

UNCOMMON AMERICANS

His Gun Became a "Judge"

SOMEONE once observed: "The Declaration of Independence stated that all men are equal, but the Colt revolver made that statement a fact." Certainly that was proved on the Western frontier where the quality of man depended upon his quickness of the "draw" and where this little weapon became the symbol of law in a lawless land—it was judge, jury and high executioner all in one. Little wonder then that it should become known as "Judge Colt."

The father of "Judge Colt" was a Connecticut Yankee, born in 1814. As a boy Samuel Colt listened to veterans talk about battles of the Revolution and especially about the feats of a rifleman named Tim Murphy who had a double-barreled rifle. If someone could invent a gun that would shoot five or six times without reloading, that nation would rule the world. But, of course, that was impossible, said the men of that day.

Young Sam Colt didn't believe it was impossible. So he began experimenting with a four-barreled rifle but he couldn't make it work satisfactorily. Then he was apprenticed to a sea captain and from the sailors he learned to carve out little objects in wood.

One day in the Indian ocean, while idly watching the steersman at the wheel, he noticed that regardless of which way the wheel was spun, each spoke always came directly in line with a clutch that could be set to hold it. As he watched he found himself visioning holes in the rim of the wheel—holes which successively came into alignment with a stationary opening. In a flash he saw the answer to his problem of a repeating gun. Then with "a jackknife that cost less than a dollar he started to whittle out the foundation of a fortune which was to run into millions." From that model came the revolver which first proved its value in the war with the Seminole Indians, won an even greater reputation in the Mexican war and by the time the Civil war had begun was an indispensable part of a soldier's armament.

Not only was Sam Colt the inventor of a weapon which vitally affected military history, but he "was the first of the great American industrialists. Colt, not the modern motor car manufacturer, conceived and first utilized in his plant standardized machine production, division of labor and the 'assembly line.' He showed the way to the modern promoters of war . . . he was the precursor of the modern munitions kings—a pioneer in the art of playing one nation against another to increase his sales."

An Important Vice-President

IT'S a standard joke that the vice president of the United States is about the most unimportant individual in our federal government unless the President happens to die. In that case he immediately becomes a very important man. But there was one vice president whose high place in American history is due to his own death, rather than that of a President.

In 1884 Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, who had served as congressman, senator and governor and who had twice before been an unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency and once before defeated for the vice presidency, was elected vice president when Grover Cleveland defeated Blaine, the Republican candidate. Hendricks died eight months after his inauguration but his death while in office was not unique. Four other vice presidents—George Clinton, Elbridge Gerry, William R. King and Henry Wilson—had suffered the same fate. But for the first time in three-quarters of a century America became aware of the potential dangers in such a situation.

The Constitution provides that in the case of removal, death, resignation or disability of a President, the vice president shall succeed him. But in 1885 the vice president was dead. Suppose now that the President should also die, resign or be removed from office. Who would then become President? Neither the Constitution nor any act of congress had provided for that emergency, and apparently no one had ever given any thought to its possible results.

So congress got busy and on January 19, 1886 it passed a law providing for a Presidential succession in case the vice president could not serve. Under its terms the secretary of state would become President. In case he, too, would be unable to serve, the next in line would be the secretary of the treasury and so on down the cabinet—secretary of war, attorney-general, postmaster—general, secretary of the navy, secretary of the interior, secretary of agriculture, secretary of commerce and secretary of labor.

Thus in bringing about this change Thomas A. Hendricks became an "important" vice president—but he had to die to do it!
